Mr. Bechstein was born in the town of Frankfort August 1, 1854 and resided here all his life. He was the son of Henry and Sophia Hohman Bechstein. Better Home Contest Meets With Approval

Schools in this district are being organized rapidly to participate with thousands of other schools throughout the country in the nation-wide educational undertaking announced recently to promote better home lighting.

Machinery is now being set in motion through the efforts of the educational authorities and local electric league so that pupils in this section may have a opportunity to win one of the many national prizes which range in value from college scholarships to a $15,000 model electric home.

To create greater local interest in the campaign, arrangements are being perfected to offer local and district prizes in the schools. The district prize essays will in turn be entered in the national contest.

Many other parts of the state have reported considerable interest in the better home lighting movement which it's sponsor, the National Lighting Educational Committee, hopes will result in lessened eye strain and better living conditions.

Urges Women Not to Be Among Ballot "Slackers"

MRS. ALVIN T. HERT

Born on a southern Indiana farm, the teacher of a country school, the wife of a successful business man whose affairs she now manages, a farmer on her own Kentucky acres, an able business woman, but with all the charm and graciousness of a lady of the old school—such is Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, Vice-Chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Mrs. Hert's headquarters are in Chicago, from which center she is broadcasting to American women first of all the message of their great responsibility. The women claimed that if given the vote they would make the United States a better place to live in. Mrs. Hert is urging all women not to be among the twenty-five million ballot slackers, but to go to the polls on Election Day and vote for what they believe to be the only plan that will mean most in the lightening of human burdens, in the general welfare of all.

True, Mrs. Hert is a good Republican, but her messages breathe first of all the soul of a humanitarian, coupled with the conviction that of all the agencies at hand the Republican party is the most effective one through which what women want—social progress, the greatest good of the greatest number—can be achieved.

Her political creed is summed up in the belief that the purpose of government is to "establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

It is hard to quarrel with such a creed unless one wants to find fault with the preamble of the Constitution of the United States!

Club Achievement Day Held At Joliet Last Saturday

On Saturday, September 6, there were 40 Will County boys and girls who showed their calves and pigs in the annual Achievement Day for the Boys' and Girls' Club work, sponsored by the Will County Farm Bureau. This show was held at the Northern Fair and Amusement Association Grounds, commonly known as Power's Race Track, near Joliet.

About 200 people witnessed the showing of the animals and the awarding of the ribbons. Prof. C. S. Rhode, Dairy Extension Specialist of the University of Illinois, judged the dairy calves and Robt. Evans, of the American Duroc-Jersey Record Association of Chicago, placed the pigs and litters.

Record Book Awards
Ribbons were awarded on the record books of the members in all the clubs. In making these awards the books from the different clubs were scored on the club basis and not on the basis of the breed of animal on which the book was kept. There were 42 members who turned in books at the end of the year. The Calf Club was the highest with 100 per cent of the members completing the work which was started at the beginning of the club year. Eight of the 12 in the sow and litter club completed the work and in the Pig Club 17 out of 22 completed the work. The boys and girls in the calf club are especially to be congratulated on the fine showing they made in carrying out their project which they started.

Several banks in the county gave liberally toward the premium money to be awarded to the winners in the club work. These banks are to be commended on their progressive action in helping to forward a project which is of such vital importance to the agricultural community as is the Boys and Girls Club work.

G. O. P. VICTOR IN MAINE ELECTION

Brewster, Republican, Elected Governor Over Pattangall, Democrat.

Augusta, Maine.—Maine has again gone Republican.

On the face of incomplete returns Ralph O. Brewster, Republican, has been elected governor by about 35,000 plurality over W. R. Pattangall, Democrat.

Returns from 593 precincts out of 633 in the state, including all but one precinct of the city of Portland, give for governor:

Brewster (Rep.), 136,648; Pattangall (Dem.), 103,273.

William R. Pattangall, Democrat, admitted defeat by Ralph O. Brewster, Republican, in Monday's gubernatorial election.

United States Senator Bert M. Fernald has been re-elected by a plurality larger than that given Brewster. Fernald's Democratic opponent was Fulton J. Redman.

The latest figures are: Fernald, 125,360; Redman, 83,258.

Based on the same incomplete results, the four Republican congressmen have been returned by slightly increased pluralities over two years ago. The state legislature remains safely Republican in both branches, so the G. O. P. has made a clean sweep.

The Democrats made a vigorous campaign and their shouting, added to the pleas of Republicans to back up Coolidge and the national administration, brought out the largest vote in the history of the state. A total vote of about 224,000 is indicated.

The normal Republican victory in Maine is around 28,000—the figure of two years ago.

Aside from the governorship, the major state office contested was that of auditor. For this job Elbert D. Hayford is re-elected over Armon J. Hodgkins.

Congressman Carroll L. Beedy of Portland in the First district, John E. Nelson of Augusta in the Third district, and Ira G. Hersey of Portland in the Fourth district, are re-elected over William M. Ingraham of Portland, Leon O. Tobbetts of Waterville and Clinton C. Stevens of Bangor, respectively.

The result in the Second district is considered close. The contest is between Congressman Wallace H. White Jr., of Lewiston, Republican candidate for re-election, and Bertrand G. McIntyre, Norway, Democrat.

The marines will take up defensive positions on the boundaries of the international settlement to prevent invasion of that section of Shanghai by the forces of General Chi and his allies.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen will move his forces against Gen. Wu Pei Fu. It is indicated. Doctor Sun is an ally of Gen. Chang Tso Lin, war lord of Manchuria. ARCHMAN

SYNOPSIS.—Thrown from his auto in a New York village, a man is carried unconscious into the home of a Miss Edith Grant. A doctor discovers he has been shot, fatally. Consciousness returning, he babbles of "millions." He begs that Henry Archman, millionaire resident of the vicinity, be sent for, declaring he has important papers for him.

"Telephone?" The man had grown suddenly calm. He seemed to have recovered complete possession of his senses. "Good! Good! Telephone to him at once that Morbach—"

"Morbach!" The girl echoed the name.

"Yes, tell him that Morbach is here. Tell him to come quick. Quick! You understand?"

"Yes, I understand." The girl went to the telephone, and lifted her hand to the receiver. Then she hesitated and turned. "Is it Mr. Henry Archman or his son Harry that you wish to see?" she asked.

"Henry! Henry! What have I to do with boys? Tell Henry to come—quick!"

The girl spoke into the telephone. Morbach lay feverishly listening while she got the desired connection. "Is Mr. Archman there?" she asked. Then: "Mr. Henry Archman isn't at home," she said.

"Not at home! Oh! Is any one there who is in his confidence? Any one who has the brains?"

The girl spoke once more into the telephone. "There's a woman at the phone now," she said, a moment later. "It's his daughter. Can you tell her something about your business with Mr. Archman?"

"My business!" The man laughed gaspingly. "Tell him that I have information that is worth millions. Tell him that I die. Tell him what you please. Only tell him to come."

Again Edith spoke into the telephone; then she turned. "Miss Archman says that she will send her father's secretary, Mr. Akin, here at once," she explained, "and that she will try and reach her father and send him here also. Mr. Archman's house is two miles away, and it will take some time for either of them to get here."

"He had better come quick." The man sobbed the words. "Doctor, you will keep me alive till he comes. I must not die till he comes."

"I'll do my best." The doctor bent over him and held a teaspoonful of some potent concoction to his lips. "Take this and lie as still as you can and save your strength."

The man swallowed the liquor and lay still. An instant later the doctor left him and went to the telephone and called up the police station.

Harrison heard him and seemed galvanized to action. Quickly he turned to Miss Grant. "I must go," he said. "I suppose this Mr. Akin will be here as he promised. Do you know him?"

The girl shook her head. "No," she said.

The doctor heard the words and came over. Harrison spoke to him. "I was just wondering whether Mr. Akin could be relied upon," he said. "I've got a horse and buggy out here and perhaps I might meet him and hurry him up. Good-night!" and he turned toward the door.

"Good-night," the girl spoke softly. "Let me thank you for what you have done."

"No thanks are necessary," responded Harrison hastily. "If they are due to any one, they are to you. But I guess there are no thanks coming to either of us. Good-night." He opened the door and went out.

A moment later the doctor looked up. "That gentleman hasn't gone, has he?" he demanded.

Edith nodded. "He said he was in a hurry and that there didn't seem anything more to do."

The doctor frowned. "Did he give you his name and address?" he asked. Edith hesitated. "He gave me his name," she said. "It is Henry Harrison. But he gave no address."

"That's bad!" The doctor frowned. "This is a case of murder, you know. His testimony will certainly be wanted. However, I suppose he can be found."

"His buggy was struck in the collision. Perhaps it was damaged. Maybe he hasn't gone yet. Shall I see?" The girl went out through the dining-room, closing the door between the two rooms as she passed through it. She was gone a long time—or so it seemed to the doctor. When she came back she shook her head. "He's gone," she said. "The night is too dark to let one see much. He's out of sight. Gracious!"

The doorbell had rung with startling suddenness. "I suppose that is Mr. Akin," the girl said, as she turned toward the hall.

A man of medium height, muffled to his ears against the October chill, stood on the threshold of the dimly lighted hall. "Is this Mr. Grant's?" he asked. "My name is Akin. Somebody telephoned me that a man named Morbach wanted to see me."

Edith stood aside. "Come in, Mr. Akin," she invited. "It was I who phoned. I'm glad you've come. Mr. Morbach was hurt in an accident and is very anxious to see Mr. Archman or his representative. The doctor thinks he can't live more than a few minutes longer. Will you take off your coat?"

"No, thank you." The newcomer shrank deep into his capacious collar. "Where is the man?"

"In here."

The newcomer entered the door indicated and sat down in a chair that the doctor hastily placed for him beside the wounded man. Then he bent forward. "I am Mr. Akin, Mr. Archman's secretary," he said. "You have a message for Mr. Archman, I believe."

Morbach's eyes popped open. "You have come!" he cried. "Good—we'll beat them yet." He hesitated, his eyes roving over the faces of the others.

"If I could only see Henry!" he groaned. "You are his man and you are all right, but it means so much, so much. Come here, all of you—you, doctor; you, young lady; all of you listen!"

The man lay still for a moment, gathering strength. When he spoke his voice was very faint. "Tell Henry that he is dying—the whom I have served so long, and that he wants to see her—her, you understand. I cabled Henry a week ago. Then I came, too, for I fear that the cable might leak. And I think it did leak, yes—for when I landed in New York they were waiting for me. I try to dodge—yes—I get an auto and start. It is no use. They attack me. But they do not get the proofs, for I do not bring them. He would not let me bring them. He will give them only into her own hands. Henry must bring her and get them. She will be rich—oh, yes! She will have millions to fight them with. And she will need them. But she must come at once. Henry must bring her by the way he knows, or by the way told in these papers—" The dying man raised the packet feebly. "It is by—by—"

The other leaned forward. "Yes, yes!" he cried eagerly. "The way is by—"

"It's all told here!" Again Morbach raised the paper. "But let him beware!" he cried. "Let him beware!"

"The doctor's face cleared. 'I'm glad you have come, Miss Archman,' he said. 'Your father's secretary was here a moment ago, but he has disappeared mysteriously. I suppose he'll turn up soon. I wish the police would come. Here they are now!' Another ring had sounded at the door."

It was not the police, however. The open door disclosed two men, one old and the other young.

The elder man's face was drawn and pale. "Morbach!" he exclaimed. "Where is he?" Then as no one spoke he went on impatiently. "You telephoned me," he rasped. "I am Mr. Archman."

"Yes, I know you, Mr. Archman," Edith stepped forward. "I'm sorry, but Mr. Morbach is dead. He died ten minutes ago. This is he!"

Archman stepped to the side of the couch and stared at the dead man's face. "I've known him forty years," he said. "And now he's dead and I'm left. How did it happen?" He looked up questioningly and saw his daughter. "Nellie!" he exclaimed. "You here? I thought I recognized the auto. How did this happen?"

Nellie glanced at the doctor, who made haste to answer. "Auto accident," he said tersely. "But that didn't kill him. He was murdered—shot through the body."

"Murdered?" Archman's lips tightened. "Good G—d! It must have been—" He clutched at the doctor's arm. "Did he leave any message—any word? They didn't get his papers, did they?"

"No! No!" The doctor shook his head consolingly. "No; your secretary got here in time. Mr. Morbach gave him papers and a message. It's all right. Your secretary has everything."

"My secretary? What fool talk is this? This is my secretary!" he indicated the younger man—"I got your message after he started, and I caught up with him at your gate."

The doctor's eyes widened. "I don't understand," he muttered. "Mr. Akin was here a moment ago. This gentleman can't be he."

"It is he. Don't you suppose I know my own secretary? If any one else is here, he's an impostor. If any one—Where is he? Let me see him!"

"He's gone!" The doctor's voice was hoarse.

"Gone! Gone! But he didn't get Morbach's papers!"

The doctor nodded. "Yes! He got them. He said he was Mr. Akin. None of us knew—"

"Nellie knew," Archman whirled on his daughter. "What does this mean, Nellie?" he cried.

The girl shook her head. "I didn't see him, father," she said. "He was with Mr. Morbach when I came and—"

The doctor interposed. "None of us knew him and none of us doubted him. Morbach gave him the papers. Were they very important?"

"Important! Important!" Archman's face grew so red that it was almost black. "What did he say, man? What did he say? Didn't you hear?"

The doctor nodded. "Yes; we heard," he answered. "He asked us to listen. He said that some one whom you would know was dying and wanted to see her. He had cabled and then had come himself, apparently fearing that the message might have been intercepted—"

"It was. I never got it."

Why are the papers so important to the rich man? And who impersonated his secretary?

Nellie had turned around. "Mr. Carr!" she exclaimed, in tones as wondering as those of the man. The two faced each other. Both seemed at a loss for words. The man, especially, seemed abashed.

Nellie was the first to recover herself. "I didn't know that you lived out here," she said.

The man seemed to recover himself. He smiled ruefully. "Discovered!" he said. "I've made an awful mess of things. I'm afraid. I—oh! Well! I've got to confess now." He turned to the other woman. Edith!" he began. "Let me—"

A sudden sharp outcry behind the closed door cut across Carr's words, and he broke off. Simultaneously Edith threw open the door and hastened through it. As Nellie started to follow, the man stopped her. "You'll come with your father to the ship tomorrow, won't you?" he begged. "I can't explain now. There's no time. I've been a fool, but it was because—Good Lord! I can't tell you now. Promise me you'll come!"

Nellie nodded. "Yes, I'll come," she said slowly, in a tired, hard voice. Inside the parlor the doctor was standing over the couch, straightening the injured man's arms. As the others entered he looked up. "It's all over," he said. "The man is dead. However, he told his story first. It sounds vague, but I suppose Mr. Archman will understand. Mr. Akin—Where is Mr. Akin?" He looked about him inquiringly.

Edith looked surprised. "I don't know," she said. "He didn't come into the front hall. He must have gone into the dining-room." She turned. "This is Miss Archman, doctor," she said. She did not introduce Carr, and Nellie, as she bowed gravely, noted that he had not entered the room.

The doctor's face cleared. "I'm glad you have come, Miss Archman," he said. "Your father's secretary was here a moment ago, but he has disappeared mysteriously. I suppose he'll turn up soon. I wish the police would come. Here they are now!" Another ring had sounded at the door.

JESUS DRIVEN FROM NAZARETH

LESSON TEXT—Luke 4:16-30.
GOLDEN TEXT—"He hath anointed me to preach the gospel."—Luke 4:18.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Visits His Home Town.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Faces a Mob. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Explains His Message. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Mission of Christianity.

1. Jesus in the Synagogue (v. 16). On the Sabbath day He went into the synagogue according to His custom. He no doubt went that day with a new and definite purpose, but it is refreshing to know that it was according to His habit.

2. Jesus Reading the Scriptures (vv. 17-19).

1. The Book Handed to Him (v. 17). It was not only His custom to attend the place of worship but to take a part in it. This privilege was not confined to the rabbis (Acts 13:15).

2. The Passage Read (Isaiah 61:1, 2). Most likely this passage was chosen by Him with a specific purpose.

3. The Content of the Passage (vv. 18, 19).

(1) The mission of the Messiah (v. 18). It was:

(a) To preach the gospel to the poor. The good tidings which Jesus proclaimed are peculiarly welcome to the common people.

(b) To heal the broken-hearted. The gospel of Christ peculiarly meets the needs of those whose hearts are crushed by the weight of their own sins or by the burden of sorrow and disappointment.

(c) To preach deliverance to the captives. The gospel of Christ does actually set man free from the slavery of sin (John 8:36).

(d) Recovering of sight to the blind. Christ did actually make those who were physically blind to see (John 9:6, 7) and also opened the eyes of those who were spiritually blind (I John 5:20).

(e) To set at liberty them that are bruised. The power of Christ can free the most utterly hopeless ones.

(f) To preach the acceptable year of the Lord. The primary allusion is the year of Jubilee (Lev. 25:8-10) in which all those in bondage were released.

(2) The special endowment of the Messiah (v. 18). The reason why the Spirit was upon Him was that He might fulfill specifically His Messianic work. It was not for the display of power. The endowment of the Holy Spirit is not for mere power's sake.

11. Jesus Expounding the Scriptures (vv. 20, 21).

1. He Closed the Book and Sat Down. It seems to have been the custom of the Jewish teachers to sit while teaching.

2. "This Day Is This Scripture Fulfilled." This statement is no doubt but a gist of what He said.

1V. Jesus' Reception by the People (vv. 22-30).

Their reception was characterized by—

1. Ignorant Prejudice (v. 22). "Is not this Joseph's son?" As if to say, "This is our fellow townsman with whom we have been acquainted for years. Surely, therefore, He cannot be the Messiah."

2. Unbelief as to His Supernatural Character (v. 23). They challenged Him to exhibit examples of divine power as He had done in other places.

3. Personal Jealousy (v. 24). Jealousy prevents us from seeing the essential worth of the men in our midst. Foreigners are more appreciative. A prophet is not accepted at home, primarily because he is a prophet. Prophets were sent in times of moral and spiritual declination and their messages were stern rebukes of sin. He adduces two outstanding examples of the willingness of foreigners to believe God.

(1) Elijah was sent to a widow at Sarepta (vv. 25, 26). Many widows of Israel were passed by due, doubtless, to the fact that they would not have received the prophet.

(2) Naaman, the foreigner, of many lepers was the only one cleansed.

4. Violent Hatred (vv. 28-30). This comparison of the Jews to foreigners so stunned their pride that they madly drove Him out of their city, even tried to kill Him. He showed them that just as Elijah had brought blessing to one who lived in Sion and Elisha to one in Syria, while the people of Israel went on suffering, even so the Gentiles would receive the blessings of His saving power while they, the chosen nation, would suffer in unbelief.

Religion

Religion, in one sense, is a life of self-denial; but self-denial does not belong to religion as characteristic of it, it belongs to human life. The lower nature must always be denied when we are trying to rise to a higher sphere.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Mokena Man Says Wife Made Killing Threats

Some weeks ago, Mrs. Cynthia Hohenstein filed a bill for divorce against her husband, Herbert Hohenstein of Mokena in the Cook County Circuit court in Chicago and this Mr. Hohenstein filed a cross bill against his wife in the Will County Circuit court at Joliet in which he charges that his wife threatened his life with both a rifle and a razor, and that on numerous occasions she scratched his face and struck him.

The couple married April 22, 1921, and separated June 2, 1924, according to the bill filed by the husband's attorney.

The bill charges Mrs. Hohenstein with "extreme and repeated cruelty." During October, 1923, while the couple were hunting in the woods near Mokena Mrs. Hohenstein threatened to shoot her husband the bill charges, and he seized the rifle, which was discharged in the air.

On another occasion the wife threatened to cut Hohenstein's throat, the bill charges.

This play was awarded the Pulitzer prize of $1,000 as being the best produced during the theatrical season of 1920-1921. Whether you have read the story or not, you should see the Paramount film version of "Miss Lulu Bett", which is to come to the Marley church this coming Sunday night. Space for bids to give a more extended outline of this play, but it is sufficient to say it will be well worth going miles to see.

WHY BANKS?

LESSON XI

By J. H. PUELICHER, Chairman
Public Education Commission, American Bankers Association.

To be favorably known at a bank is a business advantage. Banks aim to deal with honest people only. How does one become known at a bank for purposes of doing business with it? "One must be identified," says the banker.

J. H. Puelicher

IDENTIFICATION—More than presenting oneself at a bank and saying "I am John Smith." Some one known to the banker must say, for instance, "This is John Smith. He is honest and dependable." Then the bank will do business with him.

Why cannot a bank do business with an unidentified person? Because, if an unknown man gets money from a banker on a check payable to "John Smith" and he is not the particular "John Smith" entitled to cash that check, the bank would probably lose the money. To be known at a bank is a business necessity.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON INVESTING THE LEGACY

"I really wish I could understand investments, Aunt Emmy," said Jane. "Since we received that legacy I have tried to get some money sense into my head. The financial pages in the papers are just a jumble of words to me. I can't make out the difference between stocks and bonds nor for the life of me see what makes one thing an investment and another a speculation."

Aunt Emmy laughed. "Lots of people puzzle over those things, my dear. But your first problem is simple enough," she said. "Suppose you buy a bond, a $100 Liberty Bond. What you really do is to lend Uncle Sam $100 on his promise to pay that money back on a given date and to pay you a specified sum each year—that is, interest—for the use of your money. If your $100 bond pays four and a quarter per cent you get four dollars and a quarter every year you hold it until it reaches maturity—that is, the date when the time of your loan is up and Uncle Sam returns your money."

"When a bond reaches maturity it should be turned over to your bank for collection, because after maturity you will get no more interest on the money invested. Therefore when a bond matures take it to your bank, have the money placed to your account and consult your banker about investing it."

"Of course all bonds are not good securities. If you buy the bonds of a sound government or of a sound corporation you are safe. Bonds vary in price, even good ones, according to conditions. Unless you really know about the condition of the concern or government offering bonds do not buy them without consulting your bankers."

"When you buy stocks you buy a share of a business. Corporations issue stocks as well as notes and bonds, but governments only issue bonds or notes. You do not get any promise that your money will be paid back when you buy stock. To get your money back you have to find a buyer for your stock. If the business prospers you participate in the profits according to the amounts of stock you hold. If the business suffers losses you share the loss with the rest of the stockholders. So again it is not wise to buy stock in a company you do not know all about unless you first get your banker's advice."

"Thanks, Aunt Emmy. I think I know the difference between stocks and bonds now," Jane said. "If you buy stock you buy a share of a business and take your chances with that business for success or loss. If you buy a bond you really don't buy at all, only get a sort of receipt for your money and promise that you will get it back at a given time and receive interest meanwhile."

"Yes—but remember the promise behind a bond is good only if the government or the corporation issuing the bond is good," said Aunt Emmy. "Next time you come I'll tell you more about money and finance."—ANNE B. AYMES.

President Coolidge, Son of Farmer, Knows Problems • And Arduous Duties Imposed on Nation's Soil Tillers

PRESERVING A FAVORITE OLD TREE AT PLYMOUTH

Periodically, aspirants to public office, mindful of the farmer vote, become converts to the cause of agriculture and the farmer and demand justice for the tillers of the soil.

To them there is no significance in the fact that they have been little concerned with this great division of the citizenry during the off-campaign season. The vote's the thing, and one may look from now until November for a veritable deluge of oratory and pictorial evidence that all candidates are for "justice for the farmer." More often than not it is an artificial sponsorship calculated to mislead the Man With the Hoe.

An exception to the rule is re-

CALVIN COOLIDGE DID A LITTLE MILKING

Calvin Coolidge early took his place upon the farm. Born in Plymouth, Vermont, twelve miles from the nearest railroad depot, he is the son of a dirt farmer and has experienced all the hardships, reverses and arduous labors that fall to the lot of the farmer boy. One biographer has said of him: "While many of the boys of today are feverishly putting on the golf green, Cal was happy in pursuing to its native lair the sportive potato. He early and always has been an artist in mowing and divorcing the loving herd which winds slowly over the tea from the raw material which makes for butter and cheese."

He took the oath of office in the Coolidge farm house.

pointed out, the bovines of Plymouth, Vermont, have enjoyed a rare distinction. It is not every cow that can be milked by a President of the United States, any more than it is every President of the United States that can milk a cow. President Coolidge not only is "at home" on a farm. A farm is home to the Chief Magistrate of the land.

Ergo, his must be a natural understanding of the farmer and his problems, and a consequent deep sympathy with him that is not prompted by campaign expediency or vote seeking.

President Coolidge did not have to pose for the above photographs, either. They were taken years ago when he was Vice-President and before there was any intimation that he was destined to hold the highest office in the land. It was during a vacation on his father's farm that the photographer snapped him as he raked the new-mown hay, started for the cow pen at milking time and essayed a bit of surgery on one of his favorite old shade trees.

The same farm, smock and boots he wore when the pictures were taken still repose in the hall closet of the old family home and await his pleasure. He knows how to wear them, and what is of more interest to his fellow farmers, what to do after he puts them on.

"He has always adorned a hay rake with as much facility as a reviewing stand," the afore-quoted biographer declares.

That would appear to make him eligible, at least, for consideration by the farmer.

Keep in Touch with Home

WHEN business takes you away over night or for a longer time, it is a comfort to know that you can reach home quickly over Bell long distance lines no matter how far away you may be.

DURING the past few years much of the telephone plant in Illinois, originally erected at pre-war costs, has worn out or been outgrown, and has been replaced, at post-war prices for material and labor. This has added greatly to the average investment per telephone.

To keep the family informed of your whereabouts is a sensible precaution. To talk to them by long distance telephone each day while absent is a joy both to you and to them.

Station-to-station service is especially adapted to such calls and the rates are about 20 per cent lower than for person-to-person calls.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

WIPING OUT MALARIA BY DESTROYING MOSQUITOES

THE mosquito is the only insect which carries malaria.

It can not be gotten by "night air," the use of stagnant water, living or sleeping in damp or shady spots, or living with another malaria patient.

But mosquitoes are found wherever there are stagnant pools for breeding places and damp and shady spots for them to live in during the daytime.

In early times, it was noticed that malaria often developed in new countries, with the breaking up of the soil, and disappeared after the land was drained and settled. This was because breaking up the soil caused depressions and hollow places in which water collected. Later on, as the ground was drained, the mosquitoes disappeared, because their breeding places were destroyed.

The female mosquito lays her eggs, from 40 to 200 at a time, in stagnant pools; on the margins of ponds and fresh-water lakes; in roadside ditches and ruts; even in tin cans and broken bottles.

The eggs hatch in two or three days and the young females soon begin to lay eggs, so that if breeding places are present, they increase in enormous quantities.

However much of a nuisance they may be, mosquitoes are harmless until they have bitten a malarial patient, so that the disease can be prevented either by destroying the breeding places of mosquitoes or by protecting all malarial patients from mosquitoes by the use of mosquito nets and screens.

If both of these methods could be followed with complete success, malaria would entirely disappear, just as yellow fever is now rapidly disappearing from the earth.

The breeding of mosquitoes can be prevented by draining all stagnant pools of water and destroying all possible breeding places. If these swamps or pools cannot be drained, crude oil is put into the water. This forms a coating on the top of the water and when the mosquito larvae come up to breathe, they are unable to penetrate this film and die from suffocation.

Mosquito control was first developed on a large scale by General Gorgas in the Canal Zone. In 1906, when Gorgas went to Panama, there were nearly 22,000 cases of malaria among the 26,000 employees working on the canal. Today there is practically no malaria in the Canal Zone. Wiping out malaria in Panama cost the government $3.50 a year per person, less than 1 cent a day—about the cost of a stick of gum.

State boards of health have worked out methods for malaria control, especially in our Southern states, so that any community can be free from malaria at a very slight expense.

If you have malaria in your family or your community, it's your own fault. Get busy and stop it.

IF YOU HAVE TUBERCULOSIS, STAY HOME

ONE of the common beliefs about tuberculosis is that climate is of great importance in its treatment. As soon as a person discovers that he has tuberculosis, his friends and relatives at once begin to plan to send him to California, Colorado, Arizona, Florida, the White mountains, or the Adirondacks.

This is not surprising when we remember that for many years doctors held the same opinion. A hundred years ago, when a young man went into a "decline," it was customary for the attending physician to order a long sea voyage. Sometimes the man came home well. Sometimes he never came back. When the cause of tuberculosis was first recognized, about forty years ago, it was common for doctors to send their consumptive patients to California or Colorado. Later on, New Mexico and Arizona became popular resorts for consumptives.

Many of these unfortunates have little money, most of which is spent to take them to the place where they vainly hope to regain their health. Homesick, ill, unable to get the care and the comforts they need, they die far away from their loved ones, or return, exhausted, to die in a few weeks or months.

We know now that tuberculosis is not a disease of any one locality or climate. As it occurs anywhere, so it can be cured anywhere. A mild climate is not necessary. Cold air is better for consumptives than warm air. One's chances of getting well at home are better than anywhere else.

Just as we have learned that no medicine will cure tuberculosis, so we have also learned that no climate will cure it.

There are four things which every consumptive must have if he wishes to have a chance to recover. These are rest, fresh air, good care and nourishing food. These he can get in any locality and in any climate. He can probably get them better at home than anywhere else.

If you have tuberculosis, don't spend your money on railroad fare. Save it for good food and care. Sleep outdoors wherever you are and rest until nature has overcome the effects of the disease.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By Mary Graham Bonner

SODAS AND SUNDAES

"I'm the favorite of all," said the chocolate ice cream soda.

"Well, I'm pretty popular," said the vanilla ice cream soda.

"They like me, too," said the coffee ice cream soda.

"Don't forget to mention me," said the strawberry ice cream soda.

"I'm nice and refreshing," said the orangeade.

"No more so than I am," said the lemon phosphate.

"Ah, but what about us," said several of the ice cream cones.

"And you'd better mention us," said the sundaes.

"You might speak of me," said the banana split.

Some one was giving a big party that afternoon and the order had just been given for many ice cream sodas and sundaes and ice cream cones.

The one who was giving the party had just given the order and the children for whom the party was being given were expected to arrive in just another moment.

They had been on a long hike and they were to end up with this party.

"Well," said the chocolate ice cream soda, "I have heard that once a little girl wrote a composition in school about her favorite friend.

"She wrote about a kind friend who used to treat her to chocolate ice cream sodas almost every time she met this friend.

"The teacher wrote upon the composition afterward:

"Do you like your friend better than the ice cream sodas, or do you like the ice cream sodas better than your friend? From this composition it is hard to tell."

"Now that was a great compliment to our family—to the whole, delicious family of chocolate ice cream sodas."

"Maybe you are the most popular," said the vanilla ice cream soda.

"Yet," the vanilla ice cream soda continued, "if any one wants to have me I seem quite as delicious as you do."

"And that is just the way it is with me," said the strawberry ice cream soda.

"I am pretty in color, too."

"I think I'm nice to look at," said the orangeade.

"Well, we're not so handsome but we're awfully good," said the ice cream cones.

"They're coming now," said the chocolate ice cream soda. "I can hear their voices."

"Oh, how exciting this is! I get so excited myself that I can hardly wait to be eaten and enjoyed."

"You know they say that we are all eaten so quickly but it is because we help, too, in our eagerness and excitement."

"Here they come," the vanilla ice cream soda said.

"Yes, here they come," said the coffee ice cream soda.

"How exciting," said the strawberry ice cream soda.

"Isn't it?" said the orangeade.

"Just delightful," said the lemon phosphate.

"Splendid," said the banana split.

And the sundaes, looking very gay with their handsome sauces spread all over them, said:

"The ones who ordered us are looking at us."

"Here, we're being taken," said the ice cream cones.

Every ice cream soda, every sundae and ice cream cone and phosphate and all, soon had completely disappeared.

But there were still the boys and girls here and their faces looked really quite pleased, for they had just eaten such delicious refreshments, and after the long walk and the warmth they felt this was delightful.

Had the chocolate ice cream soda not been eaten so fast it would have heard many more orders given for members of its family from others who came into the store, for the chocolate ice cream soda was pretty nearly right.

It was pretty nearly right to call it the favorite of all.

Dorothy Was Stingy

"What are you crying about, Edwin?" asked a mother of her four-year-old son.

"Cause Dorothy's mean to me," he sobbed.

"What has she been doing?" asked his mother.

"I ate all my candy and now she won't give me half of hers" was the reply.

ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL

By THOMAS A. CLARK

Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

THE VANISHED POMPS OF YESTERDAY

EDWARD, the seventeen-year-old son of my next-door neighbor, was in a state of mind. He was going to take his "girl" to a party and was a good deal humiliated because the family did not own a coach or a limousine, and the journey from her house to the scene of the social orgie—a distance of four or five blocks—would have to be made in an open car.

"It's rotten luck to have to take a girl that way," he complained to his mother, all sympathetic as mother's always are. "I don't know what she'll think. All the other fellows have closed Packards or Marmons, and I have to go in an open Buick." It was indeed a cruel fate.

It was not thus when I was seventeen. We went in style then. I was to take Hattie Barlow to the Fourth of July celebration in Mink Grove. She was a mighty pretty girl, and she was thirteen. It seems a little young now, as I think it over, but that fact never occurred to me then.

I made elaborate preparations for the event. I washed the lumber wagon and swept it out carefully. I made a fresh cushion for the spring seat, and tied a new ribbon on the long buggy whip I carried. I trimmed the manes and tails of the mules I was to drive and brushed and carried them until their coats shone like ebony, though I didn't know much about ebony then.

We went in the morning so that we could be part of the parade which was headed by the local band and lead by Taylor Rowlett riding a spirited bay horse and wearing a beautiful red sash made of shiny paper muslin. It was some parade! I remember that Hattie wore a white shirtwaist and a bright blue silk skirt that her aunt had sent her from Boston. Her hat was white with a band of yellow daisies around it, and as I said, she was mighty pretty.

I had two dollars and a half to spend. We stayed all day and had lunch in the grove, and rode the merry-go-round, and ate ice cream, and popcorn balls, and everything; but dinner we ate at the Martin house, the big hotel in town. It was the first time I had ever eaten at a hotel and it cost me twenty-five cents each for the dinner, but there were no tips. We didn't start home until after the fireworks. We drove slowly, and the moon was shining and the night birds were calling and, as I think I've said before, she was mighty pretty, and I was very happy amid the splendor of it. But it's all vanished now, though Sir Frederick Hamilton didn't have a thing on us that night!

SELF-ENTERTAINMENT

FRANK MARSHAL lives in the village near which I was born. He was a farmer until he was forty-five—a prosperous farmer whose land had been left him by his father. He had never really worked hard. He had gone to the district school until he was fourteen and his father had even sent him to a boys' academy for a time and had offered to put him through college, but he was not fond of study, he saw nothing very practical in books or in education, and he came back home at the end of his first year at the academy and announced that he was through. He went to work on the farm, and a few years later, his father having died, he inherited it and took charge of it.

He developed no interest outside of the routine work in which he was engaged. He had no avocations, no hobbies, no recreations. He never read a book so far as I know; he had no interest in newspapers excepting in the one or two technical agricultural papers which his father had subscribed for and which he paid for each year in an uninterested way. He had no interest in music; he could not play a game; the details of travel confused him and got on his nerves. He was totally without resources for self-entertainment. It had never occurred to him when he was young that old age would one day catch up with him and separate him from his old occupation, and if he were then to be happy there must be something within him to form a basis of that happiness.

He moved to town when he was forty-five and gave up work. He sits by the radiator in winter and on the porch in summer, restless and discontented. His chief interest is tending the furnace in winter and mowing the lawn in summer. He has four times as much money as he can spend, but he's wretchedly unhappy because he has never learned to enjoy himself.

One of the happiest persons I ever knew was an old lady, blind and bed-ridden. She had read widely and this reading had taken her into fields of poetry and romance, and into every foreign country on the globe. As she lay in bed her mind was filled with beautiful memories; her imagination carried her far away from the scene of her misfortune. She repeated to herself the beautiful things she had committed to memory; she sat with the people she had met in history and biography and fiction. No one who visited her was ever impressed with the fact that she was helpless and blind, for her mind was full of things for her own entertainment.

FEELS IT HIS DUTY TO TELL THE FACTS

"Tanlac has meant so much to me in the way of improved health that I feel it a duty, as well as a pleasure, to recommend it," is the appreciative statement of J. M. Freeman, well-known resident of 307 Camden St., San Antonio, Texas.

"About a year ago my stomach and digestion got all out of fix and I soon became badly run-down. My appetite went back on me and the little I did eat failed to nourish me. Constipation troubled me nearly all the time and I also had bilious spells and attacks of dizziness.

"My sleep was unsound and I got up mornings with a mean, sickening taste in my mouth and a dull headache that lasted me almost through the day. I lost considerable weight and that tired, draggy feeling was on me all the time.

"After a few days' use of Tanlac I noticed a marked improvement in my appetite, digestion and general condition. So I took four bottles and by that time I was eating as heartily as I ever did and digesting everything fine.

"My liver went to work right, my headaches stopped and I was able to sleep like a log. I had gone down to only 143 pounds, but I am now a strong man of 215 pounds, and my health is the best it has been in years. A friend of mine took four bottles of Tanlac at the same time I did and got fine results, too. As a builder of health and strength Tanlac is certainly without an equal."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 Million bottles sold.

Had the Better of Hippo

Two small boys were at the zoo gazing at the hippopotamus with round, startled eyes. "I don't like it," said the younger one, a bit scared. "Let's go away." "You needn't be frightened," said the elder brother. "Since we started zoology at school we know ever so much more about the ugly brute than he knows about himself."

The Difference

"I knew my wife three months before I married her!"
"I knew mine a week after!"

Physical courage may make a man sweat, but moral courage is more likely to make him "cold sweat."

Beware of the meek. They do an unconscionable amount of whispering.

A snow white paint that stays white!

Whiter than white lead. More economical than white lead, because it lasts longer!

THE superiority of Ar-Ki-Teck Paramount White over the best of white leads is apparent, even on freshly painted surfaces.

Ar-Ki-Teck Paramount White gives a glossy, snow-white finish that makes white lead look almost gray by comparison.

But the real proof of its value comes after months of hard wear. After white lead has turned a dirty gray, you'll find that Ar-Ki-Teck Paramount White looks almost as fresh and bright as the day it was applied.

The drawing above, taken from an actual photograph, illustrates this feature. Use Paramount White for all exterior surfaces in place of white lead.

What Do the Bankers Mean, "Eighteen Billion Dollars in the Savings Bank"?

By JOHN OAKWOOD

The bankers keep telling us that the savings accounts of the American people total eighteen billion dollars. I asked a dozen people what that meant to them. Most of them seemed to see visions of endless stacks of coins and bales of currency stowed away in the vaults of fine looking granite bank buildings.

Now, as a matter of fact, there is less than nine billion dollars' worth of money in the country all told, including gold, silver, nickel and paper money of all kinds. That is less than half the eighteen billion. Therefore there must be something wrong with the vision of eighteen billion dollars in stacks and bales in the bank vaults. More than that, there probably is not more than one dollar for every twenty of that eighteen billion actually in the savings bank.

But the eighteen billion in savings bank is no myth just the same. Suppose all the savings depositors could demand all their money all at once, and that they insisted on immediate settlement one way or another when they found they could not get it all in cash. What would happen would be that they would come into possession chiefly of bonds—Government, state and municipal bonds and the best railroad, equipment, public utility and other corporation bonds. The savings depositors are really the owners of all this vast real wealth.

What the bankers really mean, therefore, is that the savings depositors, so far as money is concerned, have deposited eighteen billion dollars more than they have drawn out and therefore have credit for that much in their savings accounts. The dollars, themselves, that they handed in, have flowed right on through the banks—have been sent out to buy the bonds. That is, the money deposits have been used in behalf of the depositors to buy the safest forms of investments. When a man buys a bond, he really rents his money out—puts it to work to earn him more money. The savings banks have done this for their depositors.

So the picture of idle piles of money is all wrong. Even a picture of piles of bonds is wrong if it stops at that. The bonds represent two things. First, since they are readily saleable for cash, they mean that any individual can get his savings out again in the form of money within a reasonable time. Secondly, and more important, behind those bonds loom up the railroads, factories, businesses and public works that the money invested in them set going for the benefit of everyone, including the depositors themselves. Saving, therefore, is not merely accumulating money—it is accumulating real wealth. The money flows on like water to turn other wheels—the real wealth and savings of the country are the accumulated factories and other enterprises evidenced by the bonds.

Therefore the true picture of what the bankers mean when they say the savings accounts of the American people total eighteen billion dollars, instead of piles of money in vaults, would be factories, railroads and public works in action.

Want Frankfort City Dads to Remove Flower Bed

Frankfort citizens, as a rule like flower gardens, but like them in their proper place.

The village has a beautiful crop of wild flowers growing alongside the highway north of here at the "four corners." These flowers are, however, wild flowers and are a nuisance in this place. They are unsightly and obstruct the view of the highway. The citizens of Frankfort would greatly appreciate it if the village fathers would remove their "flower garden" to a place where it would be less obnoxious.
